FRIDAY EVENING. MARCH 10 1893.

A REMARKABLE BEAR STORY .- Trigg Tabor, who was in Tazewell this weel relates a remarkable bear story which he heard while there as occurring in a sparsely settled portion of Russell county. It is to the effect that a mountaineer living in that section of Russell, named Jenkins, while returning home one day early in February from a hunt, met a large black bear walking crect with a child under its left arm which he recognized as his little five-year-old son, while Bruin carried a large club in the other paw. He quickly killed the bear with his rifle, and recovering the child nearer dead than alive, started home with him. En route he came across his wife lying unconscious on the ground with an ugly wound on the right tem-ple. After resuscitating her she said that the bear had come into the house, taken the child and departed. She followed him, and in endeavoring to res-cue the child the bear dealt her a severe blow with the club, which rendered her insensible. Trigg says this was related to him in sober earnest, and as his informant was a man of unquestionable veracity, it must be true and quite contrary to mythical centenarians and hornet-eating snakes of the Roanoke Record and Fredericksburg Free Lance. -McDowell Record.
